

The Right And Wrong Of A Nation's Foreign Policy

By H.I.M. Yao Sui 04-21-2011

Suppose your nation needed oil, would your nation pay the price of oil or try to squeeze another nation so it would keep its price low? Can nations exist and always be fair and humane? Is bloodshed and killing always necessary? What if some nation or group of nations was so advanced that it could control the entire world and dictate prices and policies? Would any nation or group of people say "No!" to the greater nation and risk losing their economy, their life's blood?

Does God, goodness, humanity, and fair play truly exist in this world and do good nations truly exist? Nations truly trying their best to measure up to good standards, upright standards, Godly standards of human conduct and fair play. Can nations be humane, honorable, good, and upright?

In the summer of 1990, U.S. President George H.W. Bush knew about my predicament and tried to help me, but somehow couldn't. The same for President Clinton and I am still in a pickle. In the fall of 1990, Saddam invaded Kuwait and the next year our government chased Saddam out of Kuwait, bombed his country, and took out his army and capacity to make war. In the process, the American government killed approximately two million people. We, the American government, said that Saddam had weapons of mass destruction. Implied that he had 16 different types of chemical weapons and was on the verge of developing a nuclear bomb.

Suppose a man governs his nation successfully for 35 years, yet he, like Saddam, is a strong man. If people try to assassinate him and use violence, is this man, being his nation's President, justified in using all methods to put down a rebellion? What does the Christian bible say about this? And do Christians and Christian churches practice what they preach?

Is it right for an advanced nation to undermine a legitimate government and to overthrow it, taking the lives of many people in the process? The lives of people not of one's own nation. How would people of that advanced nation feel about this? How inhumane could any people get! Is it right to forego diplomacy and does diplomacy work? In the fall of 1990, I was the negotiator who secured Saddam's cooperation, when all of the other political negotiators in Washington DC had failed! Why didn't people in Washington D.C. listen to my words and listen to what I (my negotiation efforts) had just accomplished? How is it that any group of elites can do inhumane things and gain the cooperation of or dismiss the influence that would normally come from the opposition? Why was the media was silent and didn't publish the truth? Can good diplomacy work or do we need to fool our nation's people into accepting the lie and saying that we are doing it for our own survival. Murdering people for oil!

I am against the taking of innocent human life, so now will America take mine?
